The Lions, famous for their golden years in the 1950s and '60s, have won the Super Bowl four times in the last six years, and many people are likely rooting for them to do it again on Sunday. The Lions are hoping to end their team's five-year playoff drought with a win in a rematch against the Giants. It's a rematch like no other, since it's the first time in postseason history that a team who beat the same opponent four consecutive times has met again in the Super Bowl. The Giants won all four games between the teams this season, but Detroit came out on top in the playoffs. The Lions beat the Giants in the wild-card round and finished off New Orleans in the divisional round. And they beat the Cowboys last weekend. These two former AFC East rivals have faced each other nine times in the regular season, including last year, when Detroit's Matthew Stafford threw a 61-yard TD pass to Calvin Johnson in the third quarter that was called back after Johnson was whistled for a facemask penalty. The Giants have won all three of their meetings with the Lions in the playoffs, including last weekend's game that ended with a playoff-record 75 points. The last time the Lions were Super Bowl champions, they sent the Pittsburgh Steelers packing. Detroit beat the Steelers 43-14 in Super Bowl XLV, won by the Giants in 2006.

The last time the Giants won the Super Bowl was against the New England Patriots in Super Bowl XLII.
